Two questions that grow out of the Guyana tragedy: How much money does Peoples' Temple lawyer Mark Lane charge for lectures now? And was Jim Jones ordained in the same church that Lyndon Johnson was baptized in?

Lane receives about $3,000 per lecture, and as of this writing he is planning to write a book about his involvement with the bizarre cult. Yes, Jones was a minister of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) which was also Lyndon Johnson's church. That particular church prides itself in its organizational decentralization, but of course Jones' actions in recent years bore little resemblance to the Disciples' teachings.
